

The analysis of “Zhongqizhongzui, Qingqiqingzui” in the Tangminglv

Zhou Dong-prhg, Li Qin-tong*

Abstract

“Zhongqizhongzui, Qingqiqingzui” was proposed Sun Xingyan (Qing Dynasty) when he wrote “reprint of the prologue of the law of Tang”. It is believed that 80 years before Xue Yunsheng, who was commonly thought to be the first one to raise this idea. This proposition is correct in an all point view. However, in some aspects, such as family salt, and the power of the emperor, it is different from this tendency. From Tang Dynasty to Ming Dynasty, the law has evolved with the character for many reasons: Zhu Yuanzhang’s experience; the economic situation of Ming Dynasty; the change of economic and political is in coherent with many criminal policies of our time, which can be viewed as a great treasure from ancient China for the criminal policies and legalization today.

Keywords: “Zhongqizhongzui, Qingqiqingzui”, Sun Xingyan, the law of Tang Dynasty, the law of Ming Dynasty, comparison between the law of Tang Dynasty and the law of Ming Dynasty, criminal policies